

Why I Chose Clovis

Tom Krazan
CEO
Krazan & Associates, Site Development Engineers

With 11 offices up and down the Pacific coast, Tom Krazan could pick any place as headquarters for Krazan Site Development Engineers.

"I've had numerous opportunities to move, but I've picked Clovis to stay," said Krazan whose company includes 300 engineers, technicians, and other employees in offices in California, Oregon, and Washington.

"Originally, we thought it would be a problem to be here in Central California, but it has been great," said Krazan who started the company 20 years ago out of his garage. With reasonable living costs to a relaxed lifestyle to easy access to all of his offices up and down the coast, Clovis is the place to be for Krazan.

"If I were located any place else in California, I'd be paying two to three to four to five times what it costs for housing here."

The weather helps, too. "You can't beat the benefit of 300 days of sunshine a year."

But there's an attitude, too, that keeps Krazan where he is. "There is an entrepreneurial spirit here. There's a creativity here." Krazan, in fact, calls Clovis a cowboy version of Carmel. "It is a kick to live here. It's an enjoyable place to live. It has a flavor, a down-home, positive environment."
